MATH/BIOCHEM 606
Mathematical Methods for Structural Biology

Intended to provide a rigorous foundation for mathematical modeling of biological structures. Mathematical techniques include ordinary and partial differential equations, 3D Fourier analysis and optimization. Biological applications include protein folding, molecular dynamics, implicit solvent electrostatics, and molecular interactions.

For more information go to http://www.math.wisc.edu.